 Description of how the measure operates in practice Which groups are targeted by the measure? What resources and other 	In January 2015, the Norwegian government launched a strategy¹ aimed at strengthening efforts to combat work-related crime by promoting responsible and sound working conditions. The strategy is based on broad cooperation between the public authorities and the social partners on prevention, knowledge sharing and enforcement. An updated strategy was launched in February 2017. The strategy now contains 25 instead of 22 priority areas and measures, including extending the regional and local cooperation between agencies. Established on the basis of a dialogue between the main employer and employee federations, the strategy brings together staff members from the Labour Inspection Authority, the Labour and Welfare Administration, the Tax Administration and the police, in joint offices in five Norwegian cities (Oslo, Trondheim, Bergen, Kristiansand, Stavanger, Bodø, Tønsberg). Two additional offices are planned for 2017. The cooperation between the agencies is governed by formalised cooperation plans and activities as well as a guide on information sharing between agencies. In addition, further cooperation agreements exist between the joint offices and other authorities and partners, for example border control authorities or social partners. Joint offices have been established in seven Norwegian cities: Oslo, Trondheim, Bergen, Kristiansand, Stavanger, Bodø, and Tønsberg. The joint offices consist of staff members from all agencies. Shared offices facilitate enhanced cooperation, with joint leader group meetings being held twice a month to discuss operational priorities. The joint leader groups consist of midlevel staff from each authority. All offices have an analysis team and an inspection team which supports their operations. Inspections are carried out by at least two different agency staff members who decide on a common approach when carrying out an inspection. An internal database to facilitate information exchange between joint offices was created in December 2016. In addition, there a National Interagency Ce

Evaluation and outcome
 Has the measure achieved its objectives? 	The establishment of joint offices has allowed for enhanced cooperation, opening up new opportunities based on knowledge and information sharing, exchange of good practices and mutual learning. An evaluation report produced in 2015-16 concluded that the efforts which have been undertaken by the government to combat work-related crime through broadening cooperation between agencies and sectors has achieved important results. However, the complexities of cross-agency cooperation, in

Assessment method (including indicators used to measure its impact), and the outputs and outcomes achieved	particular with regard to existing hierarchical structures of the operational apparatus, inter-agency data sharing and information exchange, and the efficiency of measures, continue to pose challenges. Striking a balance between already existing local cooperation initiatives and standardising efforts across agencies should be a priority for the coming years. The Ministry of Labour and Social Affairs commissioned a report which evaluated the efficiency of the regional and local cooperation between agencies. The evaluation was carried out between Autumn 2015 and Autumn 2016 by the Uni Research Rokkan Centre, SNF Centre for applied research and Ideas2evidence. The report was based on a survey, document analysis and interviews.
 What are lessons learnt and the key conditions for success? 	Cross-agency cooperation is complex, as it needs to build on existing hierarchical structures of the operational apparatus. Inter-agency data sharing and information exchange and the efficiency of measures, continue to pose challenges. It is important to build on, or complement, existing local cooperation initiatives.
 Level of transferability (e.g. other countries/groups/sectors) 	This is a transferable measure. Other countries could introduce similar efforts to improve cooperation between public agencies and in doing so gain efficiencies and improve efforts to detect and tackle UDW.
