Short bio:

I began my career in 2004 within the International Department of the Directorate for Social Security. I am returning there today to assume its leadership, following a professional trajectory through which I have developed solid expertise in social policy and data exchange systems.

Over the course of my career, I have held several positions as Head of Unit within the Ministry of Health and Social Affairs, covering a wide range of policy areas, including relations with healthcare professionals, the design of minimum social benefits, and pension reform.

In the past five years, I have been responsible for the implementation of a major project entitled “Solidarity at Source”. This initiative aims to establish the direct collection of data from employers and social protection institutions—particularly with regard to wages and replacement income—in order to support the calculation of social benefits. Its objectives are to simplify administrative procedures for users and to ensure the accuracy and consistency of benefit entitlements.
